INTRODUCTION

Pennsylvania's statutes make reference to no less than 80 titles for law enforcement officers. With such an abundance of names and officers, confusion is likely to arise, and indeed, it is rampant in this policy area. For example, the name "Special Police" is used with different meanings in first class townships and boroughs. Occasionally, two names are given for the same office, such as "Attendance Officer" and "Home and School Visitor" (commonly called "Truant Officer"). Some offices employ different names in statutes and common usage, as in the case of "Special School Police" and "School Crossing Guards." Frequently, the law itself is unclear, illustrated by the law entitled "Providing for Fire Police," which always refers to "Special Fire Police." Several laws are archaic, an example being the Erie-Crawford State Police, who have the duty of catching horse thieves in certain counties.

The issues have become more unclear since the enactment of the Lethal Weapons Training Act¹ and the establishment of the Municipal Police Officer's Education and Training Commission². Serving also to becloud the issue has been the question of liability. Lines of responsibility and authority have become a source of controversy, especially in cases where officers are under the jurisdiction of different officials under different situations.

The Local Government Commission has undertaken the task of studying the multiplicity of laws of the Commonwealth regarding law enforcement officers. Our hope is to provide positive recommendations and uniform standards in this area.

In making these recommendations, the responsibilities of law enforcement officers have been considered to be of the utmost importance. The goals of this project were to research and clarify the powers, duties, and responsibilities of law enforcement officers, and to recommend changes without significantly restricting the ability of those officers to perform their assigned duties. There has been no attempt to include every subject which may be relevant to the policy area of law enforcement officers due to the limited scope of our research.

It is the opinion of the staff that this report is important for the reasons previously mentioned. We feel that this report is badly needed to alleviate the present unclear situation.

UNIT 1 - THE FINDINGS IN PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania's statutes concerning law enforcement officers are not found in a single grouping, but rather, they are spread about in many areas of law. The intent of this section is to attempt to illustrate the varied powers and responsibilities of these officers.

Table 1 lists the municipalities and other jurisdictions in which the officers are authorized by law to act.

Tables 2, 3 and 4 list the powers of the law enforcement officers with which we were concerned. The listed powers were chosen to illustrate the major differences between officers, and also to illustrate some of the problems which were discovered during the research phase of the project.

(Please note that the term "Local Police" in the charts also includes "County Police", as well as the police at the municipal level. Also, except for the categories "Investigative Function, "Security Function," and "No Set Term of Office," a check in the appropriate box indicates that the law specifically authorizes the officer to exercise the power indicated.)

UNIT 2 - THE SITUATION IN OTHER STATES 1

In order to compare current police practices across the nation, several states were surveyed about law enforcement officers and operations. These states were chosen because of their similarities to Pennsylvania in such areas as size, population, and urban-rural population distribution. The following is a summary of statutory provisions in these states.

1. Texas. At the county level, sheriffs are authorized to possess complete police power. They may be the administrative head of a jail, and are also allowed to appoint deputies. Constables are county officers, with a minimum of four constables in each county. They are general law enforcement officers, who sometimes have extensive investigatory powers, but sometimes only serve the papers of the court.

At the local level, marshals are elected for each village, but most cities have a police department, which includes a chief of police.

In the private sector, private detectives and security guards have no police powers.

A peace officer is defined as any officer who enforces any law.

Texas requires 240 hours of training for police officers. Seventy hours of training is required of unpaid reserve officers, but no part-time police are employed in the State.

Texas relies heavily on the office of the county sheriff. Although Pennsylvania no longer utilizes the office of marshal, it is a common and important law enforcement office in the State of Texas.

2. Illinois. The "County Police" in Illinois consists of the sheriff and his deputies, who are responsible for county law enforcement. Forest Preserve Police are considered a part of the sheriff's office.

At the local level, police have full law enforcement powers, but in large cities, some officers appear to be limited to investigative functions only.

Municipalities may promulgate rules for Auxiliary Police, and may also employ part-time police. In most cases, Park Police are a part of the municipal police force. Unincorporated areas are policed by the county sheriff and the State Police.

The Chicago Transit Authority Police have powers on the lines and property of the Authority, and possibly are the only Authority Police in the State. Traffic Wardens are civilians used to control and direct the flow of traffic.

There are no uniform police training requirements for the State of Illinois.

Illinois relies heavily on the sheriff's office, and attempts to remove local police from traffic duties. No constables are employed in the State.

3. Ohio. The county sheriff and his deputies have full police powers.

At the township level, constables are authorized to exercise full police powers, and they may also be police officers. Municipalities promulgate rules on Auxiliary and Reserve Police, as well as part-time police. Park Police are employed in the metropolitan parks, and sometimes they are a separate force from the metropolitan police. School Crossing Guards seem to be primarily limited to traffic control, and they possess only limited authority.

Since most public authority property is protected by private security guards, it is unclear if public authority police are authorized. Both private detective and security guard activities are regulated by the State.

Uniform training requirements call for about 240 hours of training for full time police. There appears to be no clear training requirements for part-time police.

The State of Ohio appears to enact general laws authorizing police forces and actions, but seems to delegate some degree of decision-making power to the municipalities.

4. Michigan. The State Police in Michigan possess full police powers, and are not limited to Vehicle Code enforcement. Enforcement officers for the State Department of Environmental Resources must be trained as police officers.

In counties, the sheriff appears to be the primary law enforcement officer. Authority police seem to be limited to a security guard function. Reserve or Auxiliary Police appear to be terms used for part-time police officers who serve on an irregular basis. They have limited power, and are not subject to regular police training requirements. A part-time police officer serving on a regular basis is considered to have full police power, and so must be trained as a full time police officer. A School Crossing Guard has no police powers.

Railroad and Park Police are used in certain designated areas, and possess only limited powers. Special Police appears to be a term synonomous with Security Guard. Private security officers must be licensed and undergo approximately three weeks of training.

Michigan seems to have attempted to define the differences between full and part-time police.

5. New York. At the county level, New York's law enforcement officers include Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs, Chief Deputy Sheriffs, Emergency Special Deputy Sheriffs, and Undersheriffs.

At the municipal level, the local police force may include a Police Matron, who has duties similar to matrons used in Pennsylvania. Special Police are used for special functions and are temporary officers. A full time policeman and a part-time policeman are required to undergo the same amount of training in the state. A Fire Police Squad appears to be a team that acts similarly to Pennsylvania's Special Fire Police. When a municipality establishes a police force, the office of constable is abolished.

Railroad police are private employees who are authorized to exercise certain law enforcement duties.

New York appears to be in a similar position to Pennsylvania with regard to the variety of police classifications. However, constables are eliminated when a municipal police force is established.

6. California. The State Police are a total law enforcement agency, but the California Highway Patrol is only responsible for enforcement of the vehicle code.

In addition to the local police force, Reserve or Auxiliary Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs, and Police are authorized, and they are assigned to specific police functions for the limited time they hold office.

State statutes also authorize certain other peace officers, whose power extends statewide. They include Railroad and Steamship Police, Park District Police, and Airport Police.

California is very specific about the powers of a private citizen to make an arrest.

There are uniform training requirements for the State, but different training programs are designed for officers with different responsibilities.

California also has done a study on the responsibilities, duties and jurisdictions of peace officers. However, no recommendations for the classification of peace officers have been implemented to date.

UNIT 3 - RECOMMENDATIONS

1. In order to clarify the powers and duties as well as the differences and similarities among the multitude of law enforcement officers in the Commonwealth, the staff found it practical to classify the officers into groupings. A classification of this nature should decrease the number of different officers, and hopefully create order out of chaos.

Before we begin to recommend any codification, we wish to emphasize some important details. First, in this report, we are intentionally omitting several classes of law enforcement officers. One such class is that group of officers which has law enforcement powers because of status in military or civil defense forces. Another class is that group of officers given power through direct employment by the Commonwealth; such as Liquor Control Board agents. We have included only those state employees who have a direct impact at the local level. We also wish to avoid the class of officers comprised of individual private persons 1.

It should also be remembered that the power to prescribe rules for officers and all others serving process or enforcing orders, judgements, or decrees of the courts, rests in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

Many things are not included in this classification because they are not germane to the topic. For example, only certified and trained police are permitted to use breath analyzers and electronic surveillance equipment.

The type of classification we are using is unique. Prior to this time, classification of Pennsylvania's law enforcement officers has only been distinguished by number of years of service and by rank in a police force.

Our method of classification is as follows:

DEFINITIONS:

"Arrest" shall mean the taking, under real or assumed authority, custody of another for the purpose of holding or detaining him to answer a criminal charge or civil demand 2 .

"Citation" shall mean an order issued or served by a law enforcement officer of competent jurisdiction demanding payment of a fine for a violation of law.

"Execute process" shall mean the performing of the commands of the writ, summons, rule, etc., by the officer serving such process³.

"Law enforcement officer" for the purposes of this report shall mean any person who by virtue of his office or public employment is vested by law with a duty to maintain public order or to make arrests for offenses, whether that duty extends to all offenses or is limited to specific offenses.⁴

"Private detective" shall mean and include any person engaged in the business of investigator for a private agency, or the business of watch guard, or patrol agency.⁵

"Proper identification" shall mean a card or other official form, which is of pocket size, which may include a photograph of the individual, and indicates the class of law enforcement officer for which the individual is authorized to act. A form of proper identification shall not be required of persons who are directed to wear a uniform.

"Search" shall mean an examination of a man's house or other buildings or premises, or of his person, with a view to the discovery of contraband or illicit or stolen property, or some other evidence of guilt to be used in the prosecution of a criminal action for some crime or offense with which he is charged. 6

"Seizure" shall mean the act performed by a law enforcement officer, under the authority and exigence of a writ, in taking into the custody of the law the property, real or personal, of a person against whom the judgement of a court of jurisdiction has passed, condemning him to pay a certain sum of money, in order that such property can be sold, by authority and due course of law, to satisfy the judgement. Or the act of taking possession of goods in consequence of a violation of public law. ⁷

"Service of process" shall mean the delivering to or leaving of writs, summonses, rules, etc. with the party to whom or with whom they ought to be delivered or left. Usually a copy only is served, and the original is shown. 8

"Uniform" shall mean a standardized set of articles of clothing and assessories, with the exception of a firearm, which indicates an individual's status as a law enforcement officer. All uniforms shall include a badge which denotes the particular class of law enforcement officer.

All liabilities and responsibilities resulting from the use of any type of law enforcement officer shall be borne by the employer, unless injury or damage is caused by actual fraud, actual malice, willful misconduct, or a criminal act, as governed by municipal and corporate law.

All law enforcement officers not employed by a government entity who are authorized to carry and use a firearm in the line of duty, shall be registered with the appropriate body or agency. The said body or agency shall, from time to time, promulgate such regulations as may be necessary for the effective enforcement of our recommendations.

Class A, Security Officer

Duty—to protect and defend persons and property upon the grounds, premises, and property of the employer, from any danger of damage or destruction, regardless of whether that threat originates on the said property, or is viewed within such close proximity that danger appears imminent; and whose duty it is also to enforce the regulations and laws concerning the property of the employer.

Powers—to arrest within the jurisdiction stated above, for violations committed within his sight, or when, in the judgement of the officer, there is probable cause that a violation has occurred. He may eject from the property any person improperly upon the grounds, premises, or property; and also may eject persons guilty of disorderly conduct upon the property, premises, or grounds. A Class A, Security Officer has no authority to serve and execute processes of any kind; nor search any thing or person, unless such thing or person is upon the grounds, premises, or property within which the Class A, Security Officer holds his power, and in the judgement of the officer, there is probable cause that a violation has occurred.

Uniform—a Class A, Security Officer may wear an appropriate uniform, as directed by the employer, which shall include a badge, worn in plain and visible view, indicating that the individual is an authorized Class A, Security Officer. A Class A, Security Officer may carry a billyclub and/or other implements of defense, including a firearm, if so directed by the employer.

Training—a Class A, Security Officer, if authorized to carry and use a firearm, shall successfully complete an approved firearms training course, and any other training course which may be required.

Classification—no person acting as a Class A, Security Officer shall be classified or considered to be a member of a police force.

NOTE: includes officers statutorily referred to as:

- CEMETARY GUARD 1873, Act 45, Section 1 County Code Section 1212

- 2. A definition should be made to determine the differences between a full time police officer and a part-time police officer. Such a definition should include the training requirements of each type of police officer.
- 3. Presently, the State of California utilizes a system of different training requirements for officers with various responsibilities, duties, and powers.

 Such a system may be readily applicable to Pennsylvania. The Local Government Commission may wish to propose a resolution calling upon the General Assembly to study the feasibility of adopting such a system in the Commonwealth.
- 4. We also recommend the repeal of all obsolete statutes which do not conform with the classification recommended in this report. For a list of such recommended repeals, please consult Appendix A.
- 5. We recommend the updating of laws not in keeping with modern practices. One example is Act 180 of 1919, which provides for only 20 detectives for the county of Philadelphia.

UNIT 2 - THE SITUATION IN OTHER STATES

1. The material in this section was obtained over a period of approximately two months. The information was obtained through conversations with various officials in the respective states. Little or no research of statutes or current legislation in these states was conducted, since it was not the intent of this paper to report extensively on the circumstances in other states. As a result, recent changes, as well as incomplete or incorrect information about the circumstances in police classification in other states may not have been considered.
